A federal district judge in Norfolk yesterday awarded a group of high-tech Ohio treasure hunters full title to the richest shipwreck in the nation's history, slapping down in the process a gold grab attempt by 38 insurance companies, Columbia University and the administration of New York Gov. Mario Cuomo.

In a legal opinion that charts new territory in the burgeoning field of deep-ocean exploration and recovery, Judge Richard B. Kellam said any conceivable prior claim to the more than $400 million in gold aboard the SS Central America was clearly abandoned in the 132 years since the steamer sank in a hurricane while ferrying bullion and prospectors from the California gold rush.

"We're pretty happy," said Richard Robol, attorney for the Columbus America Discovery Group, which three years ago found the long-lost ship 160 miles off the South Carolina coast and 1½ miles beneath the surface. "This means every child's dream of finding a treasure ship is not only a human dream but a legal one as well."

The Discovery group, a low-profile, high-technology effort financed primarily
